"WILD CATS OF PARIS."

It is over in Paris that men are mistaken for women, and the wine is 100 per cent.

There's some terrible goin's on over 'round those parts. 'sas' shame. Something should be done NOT to stop it. In France you seldom see an Frenchman; they're all Americans.

In this story, we first introduce our atmosphere. In fact this story was laid in the center of the outskirts of Paris. There are Appach's an everthin. There's shootin's and drinkin's and all sech goin's on.

So now the story starts:-

There's a frightful tough Guy, called Piedro.Pierre. And what a no account was he.

Then there was the lovers. Two of them this time, and right at it too. Well. they carressed, and made eternal vows, and all of that.

Along comes Piedro in his Butts Royce and steals little Lizzie right from Horatio's arms. Then he beats little Horatio dizzy and drives on. At the Old Mill, just two blocks from Eiffles Tower Piedro parks his bus and locks little Lizzie in the horrid old dark Mill. Ooooh! Can you imagine such a thing. It is terrible.

Then Piedro steps down to the water and releases the sharks. All six of them. He instructs them to do they're stuff. And of course a shark never did any good.

Then Piedro soaks in a few drinks of that rotten scofflaw and staggers bak to Lizzie's room. And Ooooh!! Such goin's on as he expected to get away with. Well, anyway, Little Lizzie puts up a brave scrap until her wierd screams, caused her lover to know her wherabouts and come to the rescue.

Percy, her boyfriend was compelled to enter the Mill thru the Tower, so he jumps onto Goofey Piedro's neck.

The Big Broad shouldered Bully Piedro and frail little Percy but sincere wage battle--" Hammer and Tongs". It was almost a Tong War--but Percy won and the lovers were united--and lived happily until next day--then they died.
